

- ▶ In the last session of a volatile week, financial markets operated in a positive mood. In Europe, stock indices experienced broad-based gains and the Eurostoxx registered the biggest one-day increase since April. Equities edged slightly down in the U.S. and Japan after strong advances in the previous sessions and stock indices in EM increased, especially in Latin America (Brazilian Ibovespa +2.8% and Argentine Merval +2.6%).
- ▶ In fixed-income markets, yields on long-term sovereign bonds increased in the euro area and edged down in the U.S. In this context, the U.S. dollar weakened against most of its peers in advanced and emerging economies and the euro fluctuated above $1.14.
- ▶ The main macroeconomic data releases of this week will all be released on Friday. In the euro area, Eurostat will release the flash December inflation figures (+2.0% yoy in November) and Markit will confirm the December PMI indices (euro area flash December Composite PMI was 51.3). In the U.S., investors will focus on the December employment report, with particular attention on the unemployment rate and the change in non-farm payrolls (3.7% and 155k in November, respectively).
